Only by the fourth of July, when there were already forty cases reported in the city, did an article appear on the front page of the evening paper, titled "Health Chief Puts Parents on Polio Alert" ... This summer as every summer, there was reason for concern and for the proper hygienic precautions to be taken, but there was yet no cause for the sort of alarm that had been displayed by parents, "justifiably enough," twenty-eight years earlier, during the largest outbreak of the disease ever reported - the 1916 polio epidemic in the northeastern United States, when there had been more than 27.000 cases, with 6.000 deaths.
